CLEAR THE WAY TO A BETTER FUTURE

The Convention on Cluster Munitions requires clearance of areas contaminated by cluster munition remnants within 10 years. Already, the work to remove the threat is well underway, releasing dozens of square kilometers of land safely back to communities every year. Since the Convention was signed in Oslo in 2008, seven countries have completed clearance of all contaminated areas.

The vast majority of all states with cluster munition contamination should be able to clear all affected areas within five years of joining the Convention. But this won't happen on its own. Clearance efforts need sustained support from national authorities and the international community. By working together we can remove this lethal legacy for good.
